CITI TOPS ASIAMONEY'S 2010 STRUCTURED PRODUCTS POLL

Hong Kong – Citi has been polled as Asiamoney's 2010 Structured Products biggest winner this year, dominating five out of seven categories across commodity-linked, currency and interest rate products.

In its editorial on the poll results, it noted that "Citi has consistently done well in our polls, and this year it maintained momentum," adding that "even more impressively, it was also voted top in all four categories of interest rate and currency-linked products."

Citi took top spot for both local currency-denominated and G3-denominated interest rate products; as well as for the first time was voted first for G3-denominated FX products and local currency FX products. Citi also voted top for commodities structured products.

This year's Structured Products Poll received a total of 500 responses from senior finance and treasury executives involved in structured product transactions in the Asia Pacific region.

According to Rodrigo Zorrilla, head of Markets Asia Pacific, "This extraordinary achievement is testament to every member of our team across the region who dedicate themselves day in day out to providing the most complete and innovative services to our clients. Winning this prestigious client poll is an important endorsement by our clients and a great vote of confidence from the industry in Citi."
